

The name is misleading. This would not restore anyone's freedom; rather, it would further consolidate power in the hands of the telecommunications providers. This must either not be implemented, or be implemented alongside a deconstruction of the monopolies that telecommunication operators hold on geographic areas.

With no net neutrality, any telco could decide to extract an arbitrary amount of money from consumers for services they are already paying for.

You cannot do this. If you do, myself and many of my fellow technologists will simply leave the country. There will be little future for the tech industry here.

Stop this.

Stop this.

Stop this.